

Published based on Beijing - The Great Yet Attractive Capital Of China

Beijing - The Great Yet Attractive Capital Of China

China, the country with the highest population, is a nation full of fascinating and beautiful cities. Beijing is its capital, as well as a prime spot for tourism, thanks to its variety of cultural experiences, important historical landmarks, and mix of traditional with the modern. This city offers endless opportunities for adventure, and if you're travel plans are taking you to Beijing, don't forget you'll need a passport. If your passport is expired, a simply U S online passports renewal can fix that.

Online passport services make addressing any sort of passport need quick and convenient. All it takes is a few minutes online. The information is straight-forward, and there is a whole variety of passport services available, from renewals and replacements to additional passport pages and expedited U.S. passport card service.

Beijing is located near the fabled Great Wall of China, and you should definitely capitalize on this opportunity. You will be amazed by the stunning scenery, as well as by being around one of the world's most famous landmarks. You have a good selection of places to start your hike on the wall, but some have significantly fewer tourists, so aim for one of those.

Another very important landmark is Tiananmen Square, the world's largest public square and the site of the iconic image of the famous Tiananmen Square Protests of 1989. In the Square, you'll find many important buildings, including Great Hall of the People, Chairman Mao Memorial Hall, the Museum of Chinese History, and more. If you really want to get to know the Chinese culture, head to Jiudaowan Hutong. This hutong is a cultural exchange center where you can do various cultural activities, such as enjoy an authentic Chinese tea tasting, cooking classes, and more.

The most historically and culturally important attraction in China is the Forbidden City, an imperial palace where almost five hundred year's worth of emperors lived. The Forbidden City is an officially declared UNESCO World Heritage Site for being the largest collection of ancient wooden structures in the world. It is also home to the Palace Museum, where you'll find a huge collection of art and items from the Ming and Qing dynasties that occupied the Forbidden City. It is the largest surviving palace complex with 980 buildings altogether.

If you fancy a break from the busy city and would like to spend a little time relaxing, head to the beautiful Summer Palace, a UNESCO World Heritage Site and gorgeous park. 290 acres of beautiful landscaping, stunning temples, mansions, palaces, tea houses, and much more provide the perfect escape from the hectic city. Similarly to the Forbidden City, there is a vast amount of places to explore in this park, so be sure to put aside plenty of time.

Beijing's cultural and historical importance, it's a place bursting at the seams with unique and exciting things to do and places to go. That being said, make sure your itinerary spares some room for last-minute improvisation. Start your adventure in Beijing by getting your passport or getting a passports renewal for an expired passport. Remember that online services can get you an expedited passport replacement or an expedited US passport card as well.

You can also find this article published on Beijing - The Great Yet Attractive Capital Of China, and on the tag pages additional passport pages, cultural exchange center, Hall, Museum, site, tiananmen square.